

Abstract

The present invention relates to a gas sensor for determining the concentration of a gas component of a measurement gas and especially of a measurement gas formed by a combustion or reforming process. The gas sensor includes a layer structure and comprises a reference electrode and a catalytically active working electrode for exposure to the measurement gas. The reference electrode is completely surrounded by a gastight material.